

KAINON KACHELE

In this picture, I am attempting to cook bacon and pancakes except Ruby put too much water in the mix so we had to improvise. Our issue with the pancakes was that it made everything too thin so we made crepes instead. We had already cooked 12 pieces of bacon and we ate 4 of them before actually cooking the pancakes. The first batch went well and everybody loved them. The only downside with the second batch was the fact that it was ruined and I never even got a chance to enjoy one.

This is a picture from the rocks pointing towards camp. I took this picture from my phone to capture this memory with the hope to look back on this someday, and remember my experiences in high school. This photo is especially great because of how unique the sky was, especially because the clouds are always changing. This can also be used to remember all of the great moments with friends and people that I've never even conversed with before. I think that this trip had a lot of social growth for me with new and old peers around me.

This photo represents the moment where a thunderstorm had gone into full force and we had to work around the rain. While it was raining I cooked a burger for David while he sheltered it from the rain with his shirt. He claimed the “Soggy Burger” was “Delicious” and wanted another. By the time the rain had stopped I went into my tent and and changed my clothes... the rain had started to pour again but we thought nothing of it. Eventually the rain increased in force and our tent was very close to collapsing on us. The 4 of us had to hold it up while the 5th person was attempting to fix the structure of the tent. Our tent had very minimal water in it but we still had to use our clothes to mop it up in order to achieve a comfortable living space.
